Including gender neutral markers on passports is super important for making sure everyone gets treated fairly. Its not just about paperwork - this effects real people who deserve to have ID that actually matches who they are.

For intersex ppl, who's bodies naturally don't fit into the whole male/female thing, having to pick between only 2 options is pretty messed up tbh. And nonbinary folks have been waiting forever just to get basic documents that don't force them to lie about themselves. When your trying to travel or do anything that needs ID, having the wrong gender marker can make everything way more difficult and stressfull.

This isn't some crazy new idea either - alot of other countries are already doing it! Canada does it, Germany does it... its just common sense at this point. All the major doctors and scientists know that gender isnt just a simple either/or thing anyway. The biggest thing is that were supposed to be a country thats all about freedom and treating everyone equal right?? So why would we want to force people to pick options that arent true for them? Everyone deserves to have a passport that dosent make them feel like their lying or hiding who they really are. Its 2025 - its time to have ID that works for everyone, not just people who fit into some old-school binary system!!!
