Forcing transgender people to have their passports changed to denote their gender assigned at birth, rather than their gender identity, is discriminatory on the basis of sex and gender and illegal under US law. Furthermore, there are multiple constitutional issues with EO 14168 that make it practically useless in regards to developing actual policy. There is no reason beyond the president and his party's own bigotry for these changes to go into effect. Transgender people make up a small fraction of the population, and there is no improvement to the quality of life for the average American that follows from this narrow-minded attack on the rights of a protected class of Americans.
