Amending the passport application to ask for sex at birth will Engadget American lives. It puts trans and non binary travelers at risk of being detained if they listed sex does not match how they actually appear. An ID is not supposed to be a history of the individual from birth, rather it's a reflection of who they actually are. Placing sex at birth on a passport for a trans person makes as much sense as using a baby picture form your passport photo. Both are fundamentally contrary to the function of any form of ID. This rule change is nothing more than a pointless and partisan attack on a vulnerable minority.
