Removing the ability for people to correct their gender on their passports is a process that undermines the accuracy required for a passport in all other respects and serves only to further endanger US citizens when traveling abroad.

Reverting peoples marker back to what was recorded originally on their birth certificate and not allowing it to be changed despite the possibility of intersex conditions, clerical errors, or a sexual reassignment causes US passports to be less accurate as a result and restricts the travel of a large group of Americans who have done nothing to deserve to be treated as less than others.

This change makes me feel deep sorrow for all the people that are being done a great disservice by the country they call home.
