Requiring "biological sex at birth" opens the door to rampant privacy violations. The U.S. government should not be in the business of inspecting Americans' private parts or DNA.

Furthermore, the idea of "biological sex at birth" is not based on scientific fact. Some people are called female at birth but discover at puberty that they have XY chromosomes. Some people are called male at birth but discover that they have XX chromosomes. Some people's chromosomes are XXY. These kinds of conditions are not particularly rare—about 1 in 1000 for XXY chromosomes, which is about as rare as men named Bradley.
