I have a colleague who is a well-known college professor who frequently has to travel internationally for conferences. He transitioned decades ago and looks entirely male; he has a full beard. All his ID is marked male. If he is forced to get an F on his passport, it will mean holding up TSA security lines over and over as the officers try to figure out what has gone wrong, and he has to explain. The purpose of a passport is to identify someone quickly, not to tie up TSA asking questions of people who pose no danger to anybody, and making lines longer for everyone else. In addition, this will cost a lot of money changing the passports of people whose passports have not expired.
