There are many people that are intersex, and display biological characteristics from both the male and female sexes. Limiting the applicant's biological sex at birth options to only "Male" or "Female" would be inaccurate for these people.

This may also cause difficulties for those who have a different gender than the sex they were assigned at birth. If they do not physically look like the sex listed on their passport, they may be questioned when traveling, or have the legitimacy of their passport denied. I do not think this will be helpful for citizens of the United States who will be traveling.
