The changes that are being made are entirely irrelevant and useless, as well as a general waste of time and resources. The way that sex is being defined in the changes to these forms is not an accurate representation of identification for a person. Gender is a person's personal identity that is more useful than the aforementioned term in identification, and there are more than 2 genders, contrary to what this change seems to be stating with "sex". Trans people of all genders and intersex people who do not identify under the terms "man" or "woman" will be extremely miscategorized and left out of this application process.

However any person of any gender can appear any way whatsoever, so overall the removal of this marker from passports entirely would be the appropriate solution, as it is not useful in identification whatsoever. This is especially true when comparing this marker to the other forms of identification on passports. Gender as we know it today has existed for 1000s of years and is not something that a president should have the power to simply override.
