This change is realistically asking to provide documentation of a person's genitalia. It is absurd to think that we need have a marker indicating a person's external genitalia on their passport. A person's external genitalia holds no governance to how they need to act, dress, or personally identify. This not only impacts transgender individuals but intersex individuals who are born with varying anatomy and chromosomes. The way that people identify themselves does not hold any significant or provable risks to security or safety.
