I understand the change in causing the sex marker on passports to be based on chromosomal and gonadal function is one rooted in biology at birth in an attempt to correlate verbal truth to identification documents, however as I have a vagina yet transitioned from male to female I do not feel it is a wise idea to press the Male button as correlated to my passport when receiving a patdown, for example. Please consider that at the very least, sex should correlate to current anatomy, not biological past, because biologically my body for all intents and purposes, appears as, sonically sounds like, functions as, has the hormonal makeup of, has the bodily functions of minus pregnancy, a female at present. And therefore, it betrays tangible and perceived truth for identification purposes and may cause issues for me to go through using this ID. My father is an esteemed scientist from Germany who makes blind people see, and I am his daughter. He is a Republican but even he rejects these orders. They are functionally inaccurate at present.
