

Author Full Name : D R.O.Received Date : 02/21/2025 02:00 PMComments Received :

No human has a "biological sex" at conception, as fertilized eggs do not produce gametes. When fetuses begin to develop sexual traits, all human fetuses begin as female. All of them. When human babies are born, they do not possess the capability to choose how they dress, act, or appear in public. Therefore, forcing any person to present, dress, act, or otherwise appear in public and on Federal documents is not within the Government's purview or authority. Sexual characteristics of a person's body do not have any bearing on how they dress, act, or appear in public (aka 'gender'), thus commanding any American citizen to dress, act, behave, or otherwise present is wholly outside the Government's scope, authority, and purview. Under no circumstances should the Government of the United States force, require, or otherwise dictate to its citizens how they mark their gender on Federal documents.

Grow the hell up.