The current administration's plans to roll back protections for those seeking to select the gender marker and/or legal name that appears on their passport is an unconstitutional violation of title IX rights. This a blatant case of sex-based discrimination and will never hold up in court. I urge the state department to uphold the constitutional rights of citizens and not accept the proposed changes. The right to self freedom of movement is a critical part of a functioning democracy and the ability to amend incorrect categorizations, names and other markers on documents needed for travel is crucial to exercising this right.
