Hi! A passport is a document meant to demonstrate the identity and citizenship of the person it belongs to. A sex/gender marker is not only unnecessary, limiting it to only two options based on sex assigned at birth is biologically inaccurate, ignoring the existence of intersex people, who are biologically neither. Furthermore, it opens the door to people assigned female at birth to be subjected to additional screenings if their appearance does not appear to fit a specific feminine ideal. This is both invasive and unnecessary. Birthday, citizenship, name, and place of birth are vital to assuring identification, not a letter meant to indicate what genitals you have.
