The Trump administration's executive order pertaining to "restoring biological truth" is an attack on the right of American citizens to determine their own identity. It is no harm to others to allow a transgender person to select their own gender marker, and it is no threat to security either, insofar as gender markers are necessary at all. To revert the gender marker of a person who has already had it changed at the time of renewal is likely to cause additional administrative and screening issues, resulting in additional waste of resources.
