The change from gender F/M/X to sex F/M is inadequate to cover people born as intersex, and by removing the identifier option makes passports less effective. Amended birth certificates will cause many passports to not match making their use as an identifier worse for it. The Zzyym v. Blinken court case ultimately found that by not providing the identifiers as they are now, federal law was being broken by not providing an accurate passport.

Preventing sex offenders from receiving passports is important, but the change from gender to sex does not support that.
