Changing forms to request the irrelevant "assigned sex at birth" data is a waste of taxpayer funds and employee time, and creates an unnecessary risk for Americans who may be transgender, intersex, or victims of clerical errors. If passport photos must be recent, it logically follows that the applicant's name and gender marker should reflect their current appearance. If a passport is a tool of identification, requesting outdated information will only cause hassle and hindrance to American citizens, especially in countries hostile to LGBT freedoms. I have personally been questioned at a border crossing before updating my gender marker, but have had no problems since having updated it.
