The purpose of a passport is to verify the identity and citizenship of the holder. The definitions set out in the executive order do not aid that process. This will expose many Americans to inappropriate screenings and slower/more invasive security lines. Women in particular that are not transgender but don't fit stereotypical descriptions may be subject to invasive screenings. If the Administration does not agree with the gender identifications currently allowed, it would be more appropriate to remove them completely. This process interferes with those of the states that have already enacted Real ID issuance and have established their own processes for establishing gender identifications.
