A passport should be an indicator of how a person looks so they can be identified. Making trans people identify as their birth gender is going to make that more difficult because a person can look like a man but have been born a woman. Making the biological gender the passport norm instead of expressed gender is dumb because only people who care about their birth gender make sure to look like their birth gender. Passport should be about the way a person looks. Full stop. End of sentence. Passports are for ID'ing a person so the information in a passport should match what they look and feel like, not what's on their birth certificate.
