Why on earth would we want to make things MORE confusing for people checking passports by including the sex assigned at birth in lieu of the individual's gender? Asking for an "identifier" based on a visual assessment made at birth makes about as much sense as using birth weight, eye color and hair color at birth, or "which hospital were you born in" as an "identity verification". If the information is not going to be useful, it might as well not be collected and eliminated from the document entirely.
