Changing the passport form from M, F, X to M/F, and "gender" to "sex," is both inaccurate and also wastes an excessive amount of public dollars for no benefit whatsoever. People who want M/F already have access to it. Why waste so much funding for no additional benefit to the people? Also, it is not accurate that M and F are the only sexes, even if we are only speaking of sex assigned at birth. Over 1% of the population is born with Intersex characteristics and/or diagnosed with a difference of sex characteristics, including genitalia that doctors are not able to identify clearly as "male" or "female." If we are changing this form and wasting all of this time/money, we should be adding an "I" not reducing the options to be scientifically inaccurate. I thought the current administration was interested in governmental efficiency. How is this efficient? Who does it benefit? Telling people what their gender is/isn't and can/can't be should not be the government's business. The government should not be regulating our private parts or any other aspects of our sex or gender.
