It would be an utter disappointment and burden to millions of Americans who have passports if they are unable to safely renew it due to fear of forced information change. That is genuinely unjust and would make the lives of so many people miserable.

The changes regarding "sex assigned at conception" would cause significant burden to many individuals. We live in a world where by all metrics someone could appear to be a female and have technically male written on their passport. This would be a burden to said individual and benefits no one. It is inaccurate for the passport of an individual who appears to be female to say male, and vice versa. This would also cause individuals who appear to be male (have male hormones etc) be forced upon women's spaces and that is dangerous.

Further, how can we determine what the assigned gender at birth was for an individual who has changed all their documents (birth certificate) etc?

This needs to be rethought and atleast exceptions made for those who have made medical changes
