Requiring changes to information that has been previously 'grand fathered in' becomes increasingly burdensome with the years.

Current policy requiring proof of birth gender becomes almost impossible for senior citizens.

Gender ideology has I believe become insensibly strident to the point where gender indication on government documents has become virtually arbitrary. That was not the case 25 years ago, when proofs were quite a bit more strict.

As this administration addresses this, I hope a certain age limit could be used, where data collected 25 years ago would not be in need of correction.
