Individuals should be allowed to request new and reissued passports with their chosen gender marker, including X if they so choose. This enables people's identification documents to reflect their gender expression. I think forcing people to use their sex at birth as a gender marker on identification could open them up to more risk of being detained and harassed by officials. I will not stand for it! Having an identification document match someone's identity is the whole point. It's hard enough to change a gender marker on a document, therefore I think people who are opting for a change in gender marker are not doing it to abuse the system, they're doing it to be accurately identified.
