Look, we all know these changes targeting trans people are stupid. They're also wild because intersex people exist, so the removal of any option but male/female doesn't really work out even in the world of the purely biological. (And if I'd been teaching a biology class where the White House submitted their attempt to define sex, I would have flunked them... Good lord, they don't even understand how conception works and these cretins are trying to decide what science we can and can't acknowledge.)

All of this is impractical and such a waste of time and resources purely for the sake of virtue signaling to a base that craves the harm of others and has turned that into their entire personality and only source of joy.

Just leave a friggin' "other" option and let people change their gender marker. There is nothing unsecure about it. There's no pragmatic reason to remove these options.
