Making it so everyone only has their sex assigned at birth is just wrong. It will cause enormous confusion and waste authorities time investigating why someone who appears clearly male has a passport stating f.

Most sensible is to let the law to remain as it naturally was and allow people to change their gender on their passport subject to conditions.

A midway possibility to clearly mark if someone has a deviation from their birth sex. Telling the authorities reading the passport, yes they were born female, no this isn't a mistake or fraud, they look like a guy we know. They're trans.

I'm a straight cis guy and I really don't get the fuss about just trying to make trans people's lives more awkward. What is this trying to achieve?
