For the proper identification of U.S. passport holders, it should not be necessary for a person to mark the sex assigned at their birth, as requested by EO14168. Because the EO is being challenged in court, such a change is premature, as well as unnecessarily humiliating for people who do not present as the marked sex.

This change will entail a lot of extra work on the part of the government, as people have to request a new passport for no other reason. And it will entail unnecessary expense on the part of U.S. citizens to have to get a new passport.

It is also no more accurate than the current requirement. And it is likely to lengthen wait times for ALL citizens coming through Passport Control as the designation that does not match how a person presents will have to be explained while the rest of us wait.
