My biological size at birth was 7lb 6oz and 22 inches long. Neither size-at-birth nor sex-at-birth is useful for identifying adults.

However, unlike size-at-birth, describing people by their sex-at-birth can put them in danger. Some people want to harm trans people, and use the entirely fictional idea that trans people's existence hurts women to do so. This is a harmful lie -- women are not hurt by the existence of trans people, any more than they are hurt by the existence of left-handed people.

Putting sex at birth on passports would provide no positive value and would endanger people.
