This is a total waste of government resources and time. I am concerned because this:

- 1) Helps nobody. The Department of State has not explained the benefits of this, and why that benefit is worth spending money on.
- 2) Allows the government to gather specific information on people's private parts. One of the things I teach my daughter is that other people's private parts are not her business. She understands this, and she is 8. I hope that the State Department employs people over the age of 8, who should also understand this.
- 3) If there are people at the State Department who are over the age of 8 who are interested in a government database of people's nether regions, can that list of employees also be referred to their local law enforcement departments? Seems like that would be a useful piece of information and result in some easy wins.
