Trans people deserve access to identification that reflects their identities. Forcing trans people to carry inaccurate IDs exposes them to discrimination, harassment, and even violence whenever they need to verify their identity—whether traveling, accessing healthcare, or simply opening a bank account. These policies serve no legitimate purpose, yet they inflict real harm on transgender and intersex people, as well as their families. Restricting access to accurate identification is a blatant attempt to push trans people out of public life, creating unnecessary barriers to full participation in society. No one benefits from this cruelty, and it is a waste of government resources to uphold policies rooted in discrimination rather than dignity and respect.
