

Author Full Name : Michelle Partridge-DoerrReceived Date : 03/14/2025 09:57 AMComments Received :

I have concerns about the new passport policy that forces trans, intersex, and nonbinary people to out themselves any time they have to show ID.

Trans people are real people and should have passports that accurately reflect themselves as they choose to present themselves to the world. Inaccurate passports would expose them to violence and discrimination anytime they have to show ID and keep them from traveling safely. It would impact every element of participating in public life – from flying, opening bank accounts, to enrolling in school, and more.

Enforcing this law is a waste of government resources that benefits no one and causes undue, unnecessary, and downright cruel hardships for trans people and their families. I am also concerned, knowing how Trump's administration feels about people who are not like them, how this information could be used to further harm and persecute trans people when their everyday presentation does not match their assigned sex at birth.

Again, this is a waste of taxpayer money that serves no useful purpose.