The new changes to US passport requirements are vastly complex leaving it needlessly challenging and inaccessible for people to renew or obtain new passports. These changes are not only erasing the existence of trans people in the US but also put undue stress on workers who have to process these applications. This, in turn, makes the process as a whole infinitely more stressful and complicated for all those involved and would likely incur additional cost on the government having to pay staff extra time to process an influx of applications and changes in applications. Making it the least fiscally responsible option.
