I am writing to express my deep concern and condemnation of the new passport forms, which force individuals to provide information that does not align with their legal and lived identities. By requiring gender disclosure and refusing to reflect the name and gender that are consistently documented across all other government records, these forms are not only unnecessary but also discriminatory.

There is no valid reason to mandate gender disclosure on a passport, as it serves no practical purpose in identification or security. Furthermore, overriding an individual's self-identified information is a violation of personal dignity and autonomy. Forcing individuals to lie or misrepresent themselves on official documents is unacceptable and creates unnecessary barriers for those whose identities do not conform to outdated binary norms.

I urge the responsible authorities to revise these forms immediately to respect individuals' identities and ensure that all government documents are consistent and inclusive. Transparency, respect, and equality should be the foundation of any government process, and these forms currently fail to meet those standards.
