

Author Full Name : Rowan HershbergerReceived Date : 03/17/2025 07:01 PMComments Received :

Name change, gender change, and other minor changes to a passport has no risk to our national security and should not be restricted.

Our United States citizens who have a passport where their current gender does not match the sex that they were given at birth are of no risk to our national security and it would be unreasonable to allot funding to blocking them from being able to renew passports or travel in and out of the United states. The point and purpose of the passport is to help United States citizens safely travel in and out of this country and it's a simple identification document. We don't need to stress or restrict gender changes on the document. It's a waste of time.