OMB 1210-0136 Notice of Research Exceptions under the Genetic Information Nondiscrimination Act

There should not be any unauthorized genetic testing for an individual without proper written consent or permission to collect medical data. Regulatory requirements for disclosure are required to ensure the public has access to the records that are being collected. This means that medical records or medical reports must not be shared with anyone in the public domain for the purposes of analysis without permission from the person. Based on this case, I also question the timeframe involved with this matter especially given all the new laws pertaining to medical records and privacy protections for all citizens in our country. We need to protect ourselves against this type of unjust activity and practices in the future with the help of our government.
