After reading the information, I think that this is a document that is necessary. However I am quite confused as to why it costs so much? The forms are electronic. Why is this not something that could be automated? I would assume all of our military members are in a computer database. If that is the case and the form is something filled out electronically then why not have the system update it on its own- but would need to be approved. Someone to just double check and verify information. Then just have the computer do the rest. All that the person would double check is whether they are active duty or retired to receive pension. I don't want to see our military veterans suffer financially. They should be taken care of with the utmost respect.
