NASA Safety Reporting System

If It's Not Safe, Say So!

The NASA Safety Reporting System (NSRS) is an anonymous, voluntary and responsive reporting channel to notify NASA's upper management of your concerns about hazards. Your report is guaranteed to receive prompt attention.

Established by the NASA administrator in 1987 after the Challenger Shuttle mishap, NSRS has since supported all flights and has been expanded to cover all NASA operations.

NSRS eReport - Online Reporting Form

OMB No. 2700-XXXX

The NASA Safety Reporting System (NSRS) is designed to supplement -- not replace -- your local hazard reporting channels. Please report any hazard or safety concern through your organization's established procedures before using the NSRS. Local reporting often allows for quicker action, as Agency-level processing of a NSRS report may add additional time to respond.

Use NSRS Online Reporting if:

- You have reported a hazard locally and have seen no action taken.
- You are not satisfied with the response to a reported hazard, or
- You fear reprisal if you were to report the hazard through local reporting channels.

Anyone may use the NSRS to report hazard or safety and health concerns affecting the NASA workforce, assets, or facilities, or the public visiting NASA locations by downloading and printing an NSRS Report Form from the NSRS website and submitting the form via the United States Postal Service. Only NASA civil servants or support contractors with access to the NASA network (onsite or by VPN) can submit hazard or safety and health concerns through this NSRS Online Reporting form.
