

Casem, Kimberly D

From: Vivien Wong [vivien.wong@yale.edu]
Sent: Thursday, October 04, 2012 7:31 PM
To: BurmaPRA
Subject: Stronger reporting requirements on American companies to invest in Burma are needed

I am writing to urge you to strengthen the draft reporting requirements on American companies who invest in Burma. The business environment in Burma has not changed for the better. Rule of law is nonexistent. Various human rights violations and armed conflict continue in resource rich regions. An increase in foreign investment in the extractive industries will exacerbate the situation. The fragility of ceasefire and peace agreements does not yet guarantee safety for civilians, particularly in the ethnic nationality areas. Significant amounts of extortion and land confiscation have occurred in both central Burma as well as in the ethnic communities without compensation, much of it done to pave the way for foreign investment.

Mandatory and publicly disclosed reporting requirements are crucial for American companies to engage in responsible conduct in Burma. All information that will be collected should be made readily available to the public. There is a need for stronger transparency in land acquisition and human rights due diligence practices and risk mitigation of companies and there should not be language in the reporting requirements that allows companies to exclude important information. Reporting requirements should include information about all Burmese business partners and the activities they carry out in the name of the joint venture. In short, stronger reporting requirements are needed to protect not only American companies but to ensure the safety and livelihood of local communities in Burma who will be impacted by the entrance of new foreign companies.

Vivien Wong
2829 W 29th St
Brooklyn, NY 11224
US

Casem, Kimberly D

From: Han Myo Oo [hanmyo.oo@yale.edu]
Sent: Thursday, October 04, 2012 12:59 AM
To: BurmaPRA
Subject: Stronger reporting requirements on American companies to invest in Burma are needed

I am writing to urge you to strengthen the draft reporting requirements on American companies who invest in Burma. The business environment in Burma has not changed for the better. Rule of law is nonexistent. Various human rights violations and armed conflict continue in resource rich regions. An increase in foreign investment in the extractive industries will exacerbate the situation. The fragility of ceasefire and peace agreements does not yet guarantee safety for civilians, particularly in the ethnic nationality areas. Significant amounts of extortion and land confiscation have occurred in both central Burma as well as in the ethnic communities without compensation, much of it done to pave the way for foreign investment.

Mandatory and publicly disclosed reporting requirements are crucial for American companies to engage in responsible conduct in Burma. All information that will be collected should be made readily available to the public. There is a need for stronger transparency in land acquisition and human rights due diligence practices and risk mitigation of companies and there should not be language in the reporting requirements that allows companies to exclude important information. Reporting requirements should include information about all Burmese business partners and the activities they carry out in the name of the joint venture. In short, stronger reporting requirements are needed to protect not only American companies but to ensure the safety and livelihood of local communities in Burma who will be impacted by the entrance of new foreign companies.

Han Myo Oo

New Haven, CT 06520
US

Casem, Kimberly D

From: Indrani Krishnan-Lukomski [indrani.krishnan-lukomski@yale.edu]
Sent: Thursday, October 04, 2012 5:52 PM
To: BurmaPRA
Subject: Stronger reporting requirements on American companies to invest in Burma are needed

I am writing to urge you to strengthen the draft reporting requirements on American companies who invest in Burma. The business environment in Burma has not changed for the better. Rule of law is nonexistent. Various human rights violations and armed conflict continue in resource rich regions. An increase in foreign investment in the extractive industries will exacerbate the situation. The fragility of ceasefire and peace agreements does not yet guarantee safety for civilians, particularly in the ethnic nationality areas. Significant amounts of extortion and land confiscation have occurred in both central Burma as well as in the ethnic communities without compensation, much of it done to pave the way for foreign investment.

Mandatory and publicly disclosed reporting requirements are crucial for American companies to engage in responsible conduct in Burma. All information that will be collected should be made readily available to the public. There is a need for stronger transparency in land acquisition and human rights due diligence practices and risk mitigation of companies and there should not be language in the reporting requirements that allows companies to exclude important information. Reporting requirements should include information about all Burmese business partners and the activities they carry out in the name of the joint venture. In short, stronger reporting requirements are needed to protect not only American companies but to ensure the safety and livelihood of local communities in Burma who will be impacted by the entrance of new foreign companies.

Indrani Krishnan-Lukomski
Po Box 203652
Yale University
New Haven, CT 06520
US

Casem, Kimberly D

From: Sara Protasi [sara.protasi@yale.edu]
Sent: Thursday, October 04, 2012 7:24 PM
To: BurmaPRA
Subject: Stronger reporting requirements on American companies to invest in Burma are needed

I am writing to urge you to strengthen the draft reporting requirements on American companies who invest in Burma. The business environment in Burma has not changed for the better. Rule of law is nonexistent. Various human rights violations and armed conflict continue in resource rich regions. An increase in foreign investment in the extractive industries will exacerbate the situation. The fragility of ceasefire and peace agreements does not yet guarantee safety for civilians, particularly in the ethnic nationality areas. Significant amounts of extortion and land confiscation have occurred in both central Burma as well as in the ethnic communities without compensation, much of it done to pave the way for foreign investment.

Mandatory and publicly disclosed reporting requirements are crucial for American companies to engage in responsible conduct in Burma. All information that will be collected should be made readily available to the public. There is a need for stronger transparency in land acquisition and human rights due diligence practices and risk mitigation of companies and there should not be language in the reporting requirements that allows companies to exclude important information. Reporting requirements should include information about all Burmese business partners and the activities they carry out in the name of the joint venture. In short, stronger reporting requirements are needed to protect not only American companies but to ensure the safety and livelihood of local communities in Burma who will be impacted by the entrance of new foreign companies.

Sara Protasi
1631 Pierre St
Manhattan, KS 66502
US

Casem, Kimberly D

From: Frances Chan [Frances.chan@yale.edu]
Sent: Thursday, October 04, 2012 9:10 AM
To: BurmaPRA
Subject: Stronger reporting requirements on American companies to invest in Burma are needed

I am writing to urge you to strengthen the draft reporting requirements on American companies who invest in Burma. The business environment in Burma has not changed for the better. Rule of law is nonexistent. Various human rights violations and armed conflict continue in resource rich regions. An increase in foreign investment in the extractive industries will exacerbate the situation. The fragility of ceasefire and peace agreements does not yet guarantee safety for civilians, particularly in the ethnic nationality areas. Significant amounts of extortion and land confiscation have occurred in both central Burma as well as in the ethnic communities without compensation, much of it done to pave the way for foreign investment.

Mandatory and publicly disclosed reporting requirements are crucial for American companies to engage in responsible conduct in Burma. All information that will be collected should be made readily available to the public. There is a need for stronger transparency in land acquisition and human rights due diligence practices and risk mitigation of companies and there should not be language in the reporting requirements that allows companies to exclude important information. Reporting requirements should include information about all Burmese business partners and the activities they carry out in the name of the joint venture. In short, stronger reporting requirements are needed to protect not only American companies but to ensure the safety and livelihood of local communities in Burma who will be impacted by the entrance of new foreign companies.

Frances Chan

US

Casem, Kimberly D

From: MacKenzie Hamilton [mhamilto@smith.edu]
Sent: Thursday, October 04, 2012 11:46 AM
To: BurmaPRA
Subject: Stronger reporting requirements on American companies to invest in Burma are needed

I am writing to urge you to strengthen the draft reporting requirements on American companies who invest in Burma. The business environment in Burma has not changed for the better. Rule of law is nonexistent. Various human rights violations and armed conflict continue in resource rich regions. An increase in foreign investment in the extractive industries will exacerbate the situation. The fragility of ceasefire and peace agreements does not yet guarantee safety for civilians, particularly in the ethnic nationality areas. Significant amounts of extortion and land confiscation have occurred in both central Burma as well as in the ethnic communities without compensation, much of it done to pave the way for foreign investment.

Mandatory and publicly disclosed reporting requirements are crucial for American companies to engage in responsible conduct in Burma. All information that will be collected should be made readily available to the public. There is a need for stronger transparency in land acquisition and human rights due diligence practices and risk mitigation of companies and there should not be language in the reporting requirements that allows companies to exclude important information. Reporting requirements should include information about all Burmese business partners and the activities they carry out in the name of the joint venture. In short, stronger reporting requirements are needed to protect not only American companies but to ensure the safety and livelihood of local communities in Burma who will be impacted by the entrance of new foreign companies.

MacKenzie Hamilton
Box 6940
1 Chapin Way
Northampton, MA 01063
US

Casem, Kimberly D

From: Olga Karnas [olga.karnas@yale.edu]
Sent: Thursday, October 04, 2012 1:15 AM
To: BurmaPRA
Subject: Stronger reporting requirements on American companies to invest in Burma are needed

I am writing to urge you to strengthen the draft reporting requirements on American companies who invest in Burma. The business environment in Burma has not changed for the better. Rule of law is nonexistent. Various human rights violations and armed conflict continue in resource rich regions. An increase in foreign investment in the extractive industries will exacerbate the situation. The fragility of ceasefire and peace agreements does not yet guarantee safety for civilians, particularly in the ethnic nationality areas. Significant amounts of extortion and land confiscation have occurred in both central Burma as well as in the ethnic communities without compensation, much of it done to pave the way for foreign investment.

Mandatory and publicly disclosed reporting requirements are crucial for American companies to engage in responsible conduct in Burma. All information that will be collected should be made readily available to the public. There is a need for stronger transparency in land acquisition and human rights due diligence practices and risk mitigation of companies and there should not be language in the reporting requirements that allows companies to exclude important information. Reporting requirements should include information about all Burmese business partners and the activities they carry out in the name of the joint venture. In short, stronger reporting requirements are needed to protect not only American companies but to ensure the safety and livelihood of local communities in Burma who will be impacted by the entrance of new foreign companies.

Olga Karnas
505 College St.
New Haven, CT 06520
US