Activist judges who themselves are traitors to the constitution shouldn't be given any weight nor taken into account for the law abiding community and judges that follow rule of law. Since that seems to be happening though, that USCIS is mistakenly allowing felonious impeachment deserving judges to make a mockery of our laws, all weight must be given to make sure no illegal aliens get by with applying early and receiving a different answer then NO. What good is following the laws by legal immigrants who apply properly, plan to assimilate and love America if the scammers get more attention and receive a benefit from breaking rules and laws. After reading the full document I applaud those that are attempting to follow the laws versus rewarding bad actors who continuously violate the border and enter America without proper authority. This should be the rule of law followed and we must continue to enforce every law to keep down illegal crossing's and those that choose not to wait and follow the law on admissibility into the USA. I support the restrictions and waiting periods of this regulation, and also agree the 9th circuit has continued to make a mockery of our system in favor of illegals over American's. There will be excuses and yes, sympathetic circumstances that exist but those must not interfere or allow the entry of aliens outside of the law. The judge in this case acted in American's best interest by barring the re-entry and following the rules, a refreshing and strong stance, opposite of the 9th circuit. American's work hard to attempt to keep our culture and citizens safe and expect the system to follow with strict adherence laws meant to keep out those that abuse the system, or enter illegally, or scam the system. I applaud this and offer support for any law that makes it a penalty for entering illegally. Allowing our system to be full of cases on taxpayer dollars for illegal aliens to delay and fight deportation has become such a nuisance which defeats having such clear guidelines in the first place. listening to the congressional hearings of recent, the excuses and reasons for failing to deport known criminals, who later were party to the killings and rape of American's, is reprehensible. One person kept saying the regulations were the reason she didn't deport and never took accountability for the deaths on her hands by allowing criminal aliens to stay in the USA. We should be strict on who enters, and it should be those that follow laws, not break them, that get rewarded. The comments about asking for forgiveness not permission, is at the heart of many of such cases and this cannot be tolerated. So I support all waiting times and strict enforcement of who comes into my country and appreciate others that enforce this and follow our President's agenda to treat our fellow American's as the first priority above and beyond illegal aliens. We owe it to our fellow American's to know those charged with this precious duty to make decisions that ultimately can save the lives of American's are truly empowered to make entry into the USA the gift that is earned and given only to those worthy of admission. This is how we keep our American culture alive, to make our military, police and patriots proud that each person coming to America wants what is best for America, not what they had before, but those wanting to assimilate, and those that will not instead be a burden financially and criminally. Those using our legal system and racking up thousands of dollars of our money are not, in my opinion, good for America. They already are using our system for themselves without regard for money or damage they do before they are even a citizen. That speaks volumes of their character, and the lawyers that exploit this and live off the fear created by them about immigration, are also not good for America
